RESEARCH

Selected Research Impact and External Use

1. Recent SAF research uptake. Seven SAF papers published in 2025–2026 had received approximately 87 provisional public citations by 16 August 2026; a unified dated Scopus export should replace this snapshot before external assessment. Impact evidence page
2. Independent multi-strand use. A 2026 European SAF market study drew on three programme strands: SAF in CORSIA, comparison of four production pathways, and e-fuel mandate design. Transport Policy 183 \(2026\), 104158
3. Formal analytical use. The Airbus-hosted EU GOLIAT deliverable used Jiang and Yang's (2021) finding that SAF quotas can, under certain conditions, outperform a carbon tax when defining techno-economic scenario targets (pp. 19–20). GOLIAT D8.1
4. International policy evidence. The European Commission's 2026 EU ETS impact assessment

cited Kang, Liao, Jiang and D'Alfonso's synthetic-control evaluation in its aviation analysis (p. 236); the OECD's 2025 systematic ex-post climate-policy review included the same study in its transport-sector evidence base (pp. 86–87). European Commission record

5. Decision-facing and peer reach. The July 2026 Beijing SAF conference connected over 120 delegates from more than 50 institutions through industry forums, closed-door roundtables, academic sessions and site visits; Beihang separately reported more than 150 experts and scholars. SAF mandate research received the 2024 JTTRI Best Paper Award, and broader aviation-decarbonisation work received the 2026 ACCSA Best Paper Award. Official ATRS awards
